

The Real “Lost Battalion”

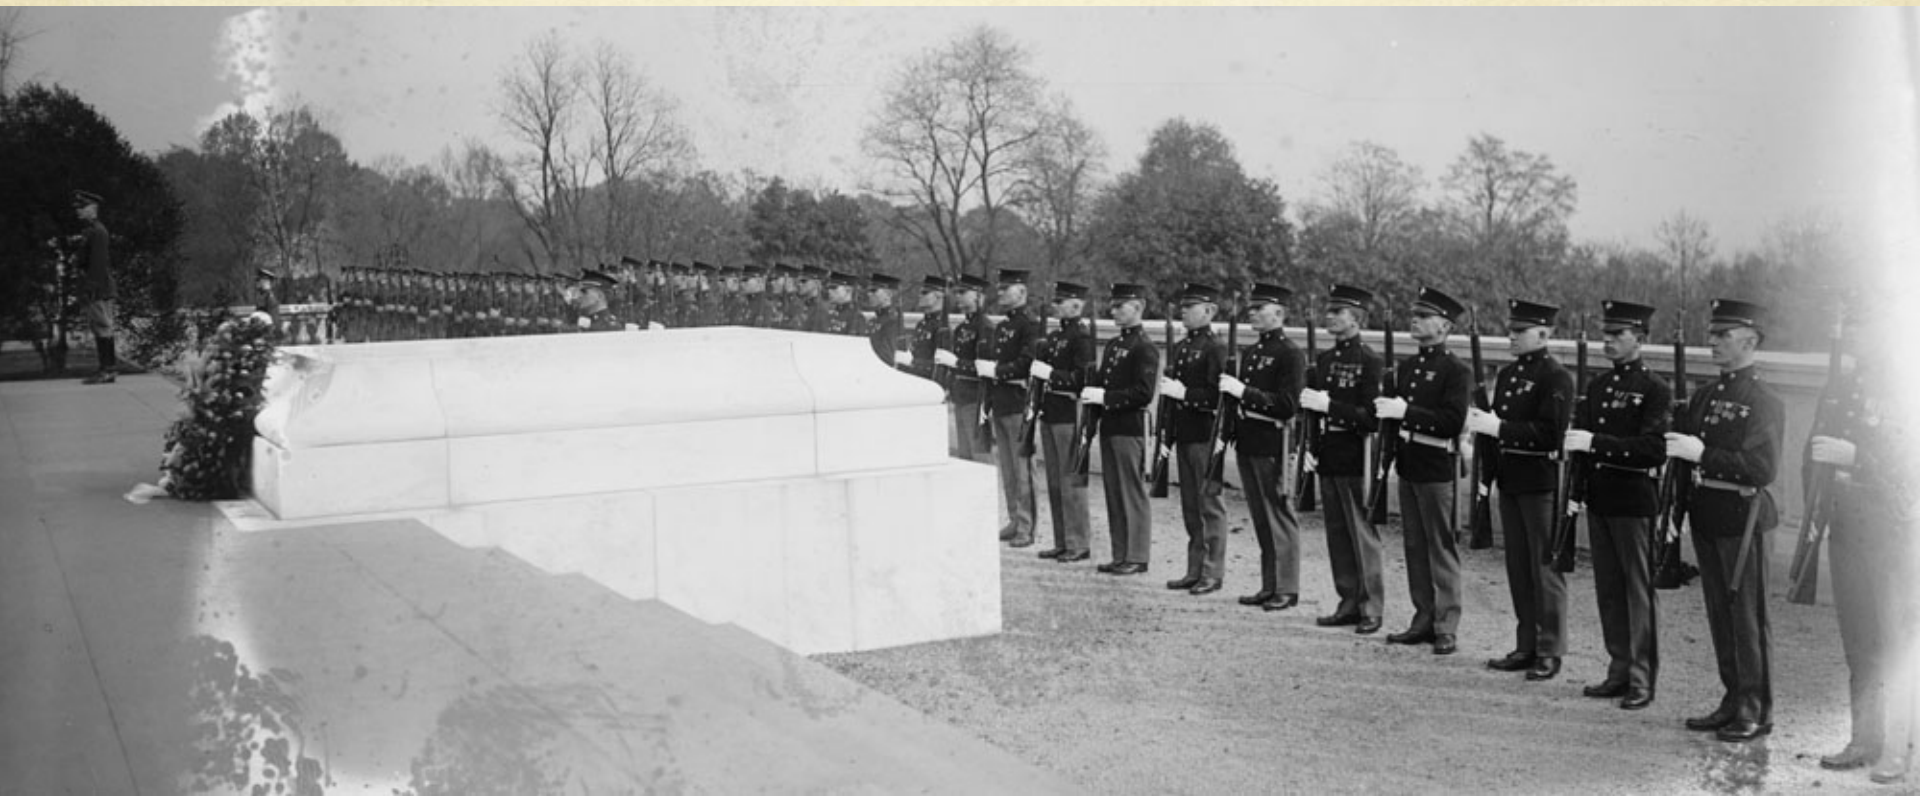

Major Charles Whittlesey

Major Charles Whittlesey
Medal of Honor Recipient

- He found himself in constant demand for speeches, parades, and honorary degrees. The pressure wore on him; he said to a friend: "Not a day goes by but I hear from some of my old outfit, usually about some sorrow or misfortune. I cannot bear it much more."
- Whittlesey was a pallbearer for the unknown soldier laid to rest at Arlington National Cemetery in 1921; a few days later he sailed for Cuba, but disappeared on the first night out. It is presumed that he committed suicide.

"General Order Number 30:

I desire to publish to the command an official recognition of the valor and extraordinary heroism in action of the officers and enlisted men of the following organizations:

Companies A, B, C, E, G, H 308th Infantry
Company K 307th Infantry
Companies C, D 306th Machine Gun Btln.

These organizations, or detachments therefrom, comprised the approximate force of 550 men under command of Major Charles W. Whittlesey, which was cut off from the remainder of the Seventy-Seventh Division and surrounded by a superior number of the enemy near Charlevaux, in the Forest d'Argonne, from the morning of October 3, 1918, to the night of October 7, 1918.

Without food for more than one hundred hours, harassed continuously by machine gun, rifle, trench mortar and grenade fire, Major Whittlesey's command, with undaunted spirit and magnificent courage, successfully met and repulsed daily violent attacks by the enemy. They held the position which had been reached by supreme efforts, under orders received for an advance, until communication was re-established with friendly troops.

When relief finally came, approximately 194 officers and men were able to walk out of the position. Officers and men killed numbered 107.

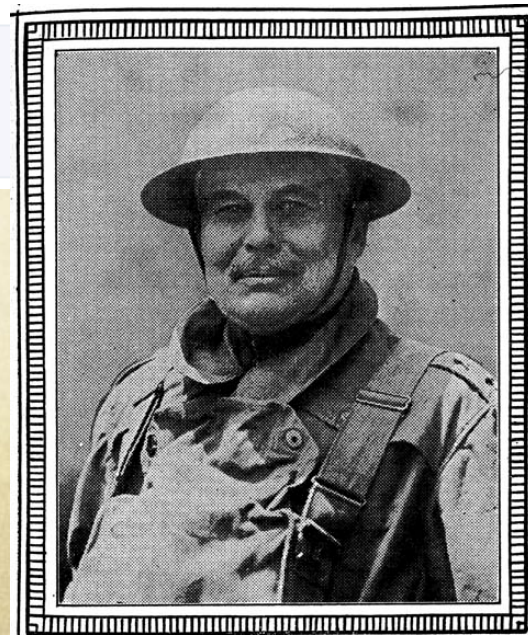

On the fourth day a written proposition to surrender received from the Germans was treated with the contempt which it deserved.

The officers and men of these organizations during these five days of isolation continually gave unquestionable proof of extraordinary heroism and demonstrated the high standard and ideals of the United States Army.

Robert Alexander, Major General, US Army
Commanding"
April 15, 1919^[4]

Gen. Robert Alexander

Capt. George McMurtry

Like Lt. Colonel Charles Whittlesey, the leader of the Lost Battalion, he was also a Wall Street lawyer. Also was a Rough Rider in the Spanish American War.

Barger, Privates Thomas C. Neibaur, Clayton K. Slack

Capt. Nelson Holderman

- Commanded a rifle company of the Lost Battalion during World War I for which he received the Medal of Honor. Had served previously patrolling the US Mexico border during Pancho Villa's raids.

Pvt. Lowell Hollingshead

- Chosen to try to link up with the Americans at HQ; was wounded in the leg and captured in a firefight with the Germans and was taken prisoner
- Was questioned by Lt. Heinrich Prinz (who had lived in the US for 7 years) and sent with a message to Whittlesey to surrender.

Pvt. Abraham Krotoshinsky

- Volunteered to guide the relief group to rescue the Lost Battalion

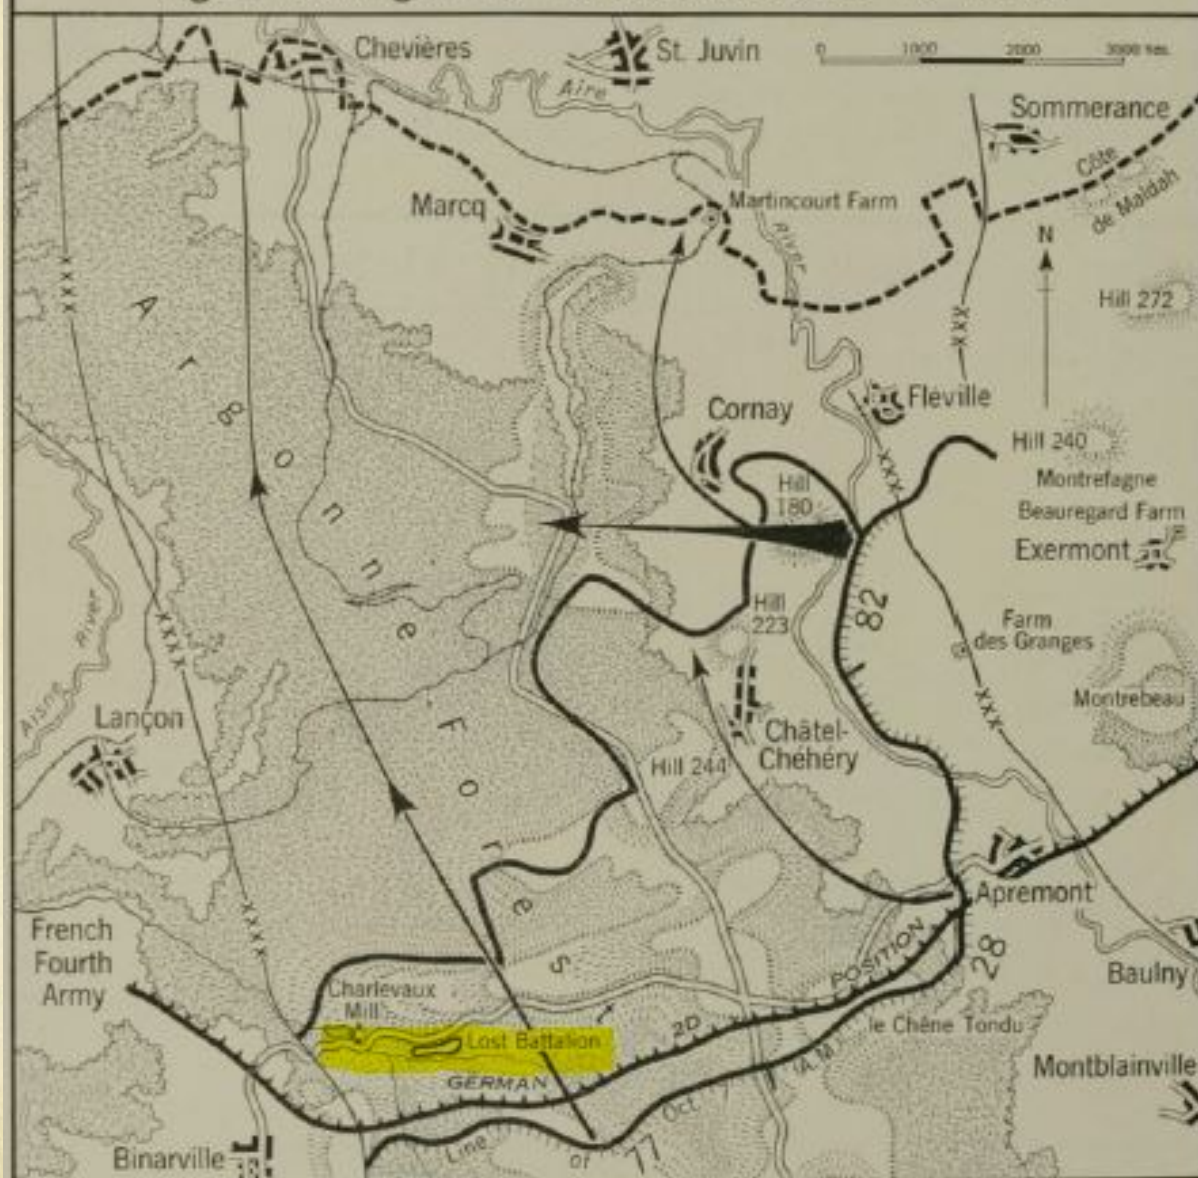

1st Lt. Harold Goettler

- U.S. Army Air Service aviator killed in action on October 6, 1918 while locating the Lost Battalion of the 77th Division during World War I.¹ He died of wounds resulting from German fire from the ground during the flight. For his actions, he posthumously received the Medal of Honor.
